Bexar 14721 Staff Impression

Bexar has a medium, well-built frame sculpted by years of weightlifting, surfing, and skateboarding, he carries himself with impressive athleticism. His face is symmetrical and oval, with an angular jawline and square chin. His complexion is a deep olive tone, and his bone structure is medium and well-proportioned. His well-defined brows sit in a straight line with a natural arch above a pair of deep-set, brown eyes. His nose is straight, medium in width, with a refined bridge and a slightly rounded tip. His lips are medium-full with a well-defined Cupid's bow, and his smile is broad, showing off even white teeth. He is a striking man whose look is modern and athletic.

Bexar grew up in a close, loving household. His mother, a voracious reader and gifted cook from Mexico, passed down a love of books and an instinct for compassion. His father taught him how to fix a car, survive in the wild, and appreciate film and music. The result is a man who is equally comfortable rebuilding a transmission and discussing Dostoevsky. He earned a Bachelor of Science in Nutrition Science with a 3.4 GPA, developing applied clinical math skills along the way. He is a cinephile and bibliophile who runs a book club dedicated to the Western Canon. He plays acoustic guitar and piano, and produced electronic music on a synthesizer in his teens and early twenties. He is a skilled pencil artist who pivoted toward photography, favoring landscapes and portraits. He is more introvert than extrovert, but those who know him describe him as a lively conversationalist who makes friends and romantic connections with genuine ease. His goal in life is simply to have lived one that gave more than it took.
